Technical regulations and marking of goods

Keywords: Quality; safety of goods; technical regulations; marking of goods; information about product; standard; agreement; packaging; commerce; conformity mark

Technical regulations of Eurasian Customs Union lay down numerous mandatory rules for marking of goods before the goods get into commerce. Meanwhile neither the Russian Federation Civil Code nor the Russian Federation Federal Law 'On consumer protection' contains any references to the Customs Union technical regulations, which poses difficulties with interpreting and applying the applicable legal regulation, and so far no in-depth research on this subject-matter has been carried out. The paper analyzes the main requirements to the marking of goods and gives practical recommendations regarding the application of these rules.

Exercise of option agreements for assignment of shares of equity capital: participation of promoters

Keywords: Option agreements; option; shares; stock; assignment; share transfer form; order; registrar; depositary

One of the advantages of option agreements in corporate law is their automatic exercise. However, under Russian legislation the automatic exercise entails certain difficulties, in particular, it compels the assignor to perform additional actions to assign his share of the company equity capital. The author argues that engaging independent promoters can help resolve the problems arising from the exercise of option agreements.

Third-party funding of litigation in international commercial arbitration: active and passive models

Keywords: International commercial arbitration; third-party financing; dispute resolution; litigation funding; participation in proceedings

There has been a shift in the perception of third-party funding of litigation. While previously investors functions (e.g. bank or an insurance company) were confined to funding and those institutions would not engage into litigation, currently investors are taking a more active stand. Thus now their involvement may extend to the choice of the strategy, attending the proceedings, and selecting lawyers. This scope of work is performed by law professionals who specialize exclusively in third-party financing.
